FRIDAY MORNING, MAY 23 1862

The Advertiser defends the Barbarities of the Rebels

The Advertiser, a few days since entered upon the defence of the rebels against the charge of barbarity. It can see no wrong in any thing that the rebels do, but occasionally with or without cause, denounces, bitterly the Union forces for outrages. Probably these Union outrages are manufactured by "able editors" for the assassin.

With all the mendacity of the Advertiser we presume, however, that it will not undertake to deny the statements made in a late report by a joint committee of Congress, of the appalling atrocities upon the bodies of Federal officers slain at the battle of Bull Run.

An exchange furnishes to our hand a synopsis of a portion of that report of which we avail ourselves. Amongst other diabolical acts, was one which would add to the local renown of a Fejee cannibal. A rebel soldier had the skull of one of our most gallant officers sawn off and turned into a drinking cup, to be used at his nuptial banquet! If so disgusting an exhibition of savagery is not considered obnoxious to rebel ethics the civilization which obtains in such a school cannot be too quickly extirpated. Up to the reading of this report we had our doubts about the truth of the letter from the Southern girl to her lover. She concluded her affectionate epistle with the gentle request that the rebel recruit should try to procure "Lincum's skelp," and send it to her as a souvenir. If the males could so far forget their manhood as to turn the skulls of their fallen foes into drinking cups, we are not surprised that the women should become so far metamorphosed as to desire human scalps to manufacture into shopping purses. But there is still another well authenticated instance of sacrilegious outrage which will furnish food for gloomy reflection. When the comrades of some of the fallen officers of the Rhode Island Brigade were recently at Bull Run to secure the bodies of the latter, they commenced digging at a point where it was known they had been buried, when a negro girl accosted them and asked them if they were looking for Colonel Slocum's body. They replied in the affirmative. "Then," said she, "you are too late for the Georgia regiment dug him up a good many weeks ago to procure his bones for trophies!" It turned out afterwards that the girl was mistaken in the person, but not in the fact, for the body was that of Major Ballou, not of Col Slocum. The monsters had burned the body for the purpose stated, but finding the bones consumed with the flesh, and the stench intolerable, they had thrown dirt on the fire to extinguish it. The commission of the foul act was fully proven by the testimony of a number of women residing near the field. A woman who had nursed our sick and wounded at Sudley Church, testified that she herself had witnessed the whole affair, and had expostulated, begged and entreated that the dead should be held sacred, but the savages mocked at her, and then, finding all endeavors useless, she had saved a lock of his hair, and preserved it for his friends, who she was confident some day would appear. The ghouls who committed this fiendish act belonged to the Twenty first Georgia regiment, but outrages upon the dead were not confined to that corps alone, for there were numerous evidences all over the field that a hellish revenge was wreaked upon our dead by all the rebel troops. Our fallen soldiers were thrown together in heaps, and buried face downwards. This mark of indignity was universal wherever the graves of Union soldiers were examined.

These barbarities could scarcely find a counterpart among the savages of the Fejee Islands. What has caused this deep demoralization among the whites of the South? It is in our opinion one of the effects of slavery upon the master race.

Mr Colfax of Indiana recently delivered an able, well considered and candid speech in the House of Representatives, in reply to Mr Blair, and the charges preferred by the Van Wick committee and the Joseph Holt commission, which, the S F Bulletin says will probably have more weight in California than anything else that has been written or said in defense of the General.

Judge Campbell, of the Twelfth Judicial District of California located in San Francisco, has resigned his office in consequence of the inadequacy of his salary occasioned by the depleted state of the treasury of that State.

$50,000 IN FOUR YEARS.—The great work "How to make $50 000 in four years from a salary of $1,500 a year" is being loudly called for. Hurry it up, "General."

Capt W G Haley, late editor of the Oregon Democrat died on Tuesday the 20th inst, at Albany, in Linn county.

Letter from Salmon River

FLORENCE CITY, May 8 1862

For the Oregonian

On leaving Portland some two months since, I promised you that I would from time to time inform your numerous readers of the movements and prospects of those whose fate has doomed them to a residence in this far off wilderness. In doing so, I shall confine myself to matters which I have seen with my own eyes and those which I hear the truth of which I am satisfied of, and at no time shall I be found "setting down aught in malice," even though it might contribute to the grinding of my own axe.

THE TRIP

Taking the boat from Portland, ourselves and horses arrived safely at the Dalles in just two days from Portland. No incidents or accidents occurred while we were in transitu to the above place. On the third day we took up the line of march for our destination and after passing through the towns of Wallula and Walla Walla, arrived at Lewiston in fifteen days traveling time from Portland. I was much astonished to find Lewiston as much of a place as it is, and I predict a bright future for it, if the title to the soil can be derived from some permanent stand point. At present almost every man who has arrived here has driven stakes around a lot or block and on them blazens in pencil mark that he (John Smith, or whatever his name may be) intends to hold said property for his own private use and benefit. While in other and more conspicuous places I noticed protests signed by Indian Agent Hutchins, warning all persons from building or otherwise trespassing upon the Indian Reservation, and added thereto by some wag were additions quite perspicuous but far too vulgar in their language to appear in print.

After spending a couple of days at this point in company with many other Portlanders, we turned our faces again Salmonward and then commenced our hardships. After proceeding to the Lapwai a distance of sixteen miles, we came to the foot of Craig's mountain, which was covered with snow from three to six feet deep, and over this we had to travel for three days, half of which time we were traveling in a snow storm. On emerging from this vast mountain of snow, we found to our astonishment that the worst was yet to come. We now commenced our weary travel over the Pah-ha-la whan, mud hole, misnomered prairie. The first step I took the mud and water got in over the tops of my rubber boots, and in this sorry plight I waded from early dawn till sunset. Occasionally—as if to try my patience—my horse would disappear all but the pack, and I would be compelled to unpack, dig him out, and repack again, not knowing but that the next step he took I would have to perform the same feat over again. But like all other undertakings in life, this too came to an end; and after I had paid my devoirs to a hearty supper, and sat round the camp fire smoking, with a crowd my loveliness of temper returned, and we each related to the other with glowing countenances the heroic deeds and presence of mind we had exhibited during the trying trip, a la the military heroes of the present day. From this point to Slate creek, the road was what might be called good, although in some places where the trail projected far out over the rushing waters of Salmon river, my blood would run cold while treading its meandering and treacherous course.

At Slate creek there is one log house of pretty good dimensions, divided into three compartments, the first is a hotel the second a butcher shop, and the last though not least, a whisky shop, to which is attached all the necessaries for a complete gambling hell. This house is situated immediately at the foot of a mountain, to which your "Mount Maria" would be a level, and up this steep ascent we started for the Mountain House," at which place we had to unload our horses. After sending our horses back to a ranch we were made aware of the fact that we must pack our provisions into the mines over worse mountains than we had yet traversed—a distance of sixteen miles—or as an ultimatum pay the snug little sum of forty cents per pound to the "two legged mule train," which was traveling between the two points. Your correspondent having figured the weight of his traps to be about five hundred pounds, and having neither "the cash froght" or the inclination to pay this exorbitant tariff, came down to the work, and putting about ninety pounds on my back, started for the far famed city of Florence. Such another day's work I never accomplished in my life. At times my feet would slip, and again they would break through the crust of snow, and down I would go till my pack prevented a further descent. After following this "packing business" for a week, I at last had my last load, and my spirits began to throw off that despondency which a man would naturally feel upon having to do the work which nature designed only mules to accomplish. On my last trip I traveled with several Portlanders, all of them packed and we consoled each other by admiring the length which our ears had obtained after a few days service as pack animals. There are at least one hundred and fifty men who follow the business of packing for a living and I have seen some of them carrying as much as one hundred and eighty pounds on their backs, when their eyes were almost useless to them—they being snow blind—a disease which, by the way, is alarmingly prevalent just at this time.

THE MINES

I had not been long in the mines before I became satisfied that they were extremely limited, and that little if any auriferous ground was yet vacant. Subsequent events have strengthened me in this belief. Altogether the population of this place is two to one more than it can support and every day dozens of men can be seen retracing their foot steps towards the valley with the words, "Salmon is a humbug" upon their lips. But this in its proper sense is not true. Salmon is not a humbug on the contrary I suppose it is the richest mining section of its size that has ever been discovered. The stories that have been circulated of one hundred ounces a day to the hand having been taken out are true and occurrences of this kind are not uncommon. In "spots," as miners term it, nature has indeed been prodigal, and the lucky miner who strikes a rich spot, has a fortune in hand. All the claims in the mines when properly worked I venture to say will average ten ounces a day and upward, to the hand. I sometimes feel provoked when asking some of my friends at night how their claims panned, that they put on a melancholy cast of countenance and say "Not much—only about twenty ounces." They have been accustomed to make money so easy and in such quantities that twenty ounces appear as little to them as twenty cents would to a Portlander.

PROSPECTING

Go where you will in the mountains and you come across men with shovel and pan running hither and thither, sinking holes in every place where there is a likelihood of gold being discovered. Prospecting at present, is a very discouraging task. To sink a hole is a day's job, owing to the depth of snow whereas the same end might be accomplished in the summer with an hour's work.

Many men are scattered over the country in different sections, hunting diggings. Some have gone south of Salmon river, while others have built boats and gone up the river intending to go as far as the old Mormon settlement where gold mines are said to exist.

Vague and indefinite rumors come to our ears every day, that some Dutchman or Frenchman has struck good diggings some distance off and immediately "everybody and his friend" start off in a clandestine manner to try and track the "Dutchman" to his field of gold. An excitement has been gotten up among some private parties here who have good claims and who started out a week since to secure claims in the new El Dorado. Their intimation I am inclined to think is in some tangible form, as they say the diggings are immensely rich—far richer than our present mines. In about five days I will hear something certain relative to these new discoveries, when I will start, and upon seeing for myself will give yourself and readers the benefit of my observations.

MISCELLANEOUS

Everything in the shape of provisions, clothes and miners outfits generally are held at exorbitantly high prices, and such I am afraid will be the case until pack trains are able to come into the town and that will not be till the middle of June. The snow is now fast settling down and the trail is worse if anything than it was two weeks ago.

Leland came within an ace of making his fortune last fall. The claims he owned on Baboon Gulch were rich ones but alas, they were jumped by parties who had not the fear of an editor before their eyes. Leland is now flying around in another direction and I expect before long he will have doffed the "editorial toga" and taken up the less beautiful but decidedly the most remunerative one of the "honest miner."

I must now conclude this hastily written communication, promising you that when next you hear from me I shall have something more tangible and to the point to communicate.

CRAYON

A Base Slander

We learn from the Dalles that the false and exploded charge against John R McBride that the estate of Col Baker held a note against him was reiterated by would be Judge Page in a speech there.

Page further stated that for that reason Logan, who was present, would not vote for him. Logan said lest his silence might be taken for assent to the charge, he wished to say that he did not countenance or assent to any such statement.

Page stated that the note had been in the hands of Ben Harding and W H Rector. Both have emphatically denied it, and pronounced the charge a foul slander. It only shows to what lengths secession and disunion will go to destroy this government. Page himself does not believe the slander.

Mr Gibbs followed him, and inflicted upon him a withering rebuke, which he will not forget very soon. The repeated hurrahs and cheers showed that two thirds of the audience were out and out Union men. The court house was crowded, and many of the most substantial citizens were heard to say that Page had shown himself utterly unfit for the position he occupies.

ANOTHER RAILROAD.—We have been informed that the Oregon Steam Navigation Company have stopped operations on the Dalles railroad and taken their entire force down to the Cascades for the purpose of building a railroad on the Washington Territory side of the Cascades. If this is true, we soon may expect some lively times in the way of steamboating.

MILITARY MATTERS.—It is announced by San Francisco papers that Col Carleton is on his way from the lower portion of this State through Arizona to New Mexico, and that he has orders to retake certain forts which were captured some time since by secessionists, and then go to Fort Craig. Col Carleton is Colonel of the First Regiment Infantry with which the Washington Rifles, Capt Roberts, of this city is connected. It is supposed that the regiment left Fort Yuma about two weeks ago. The Third Regiment Infantry (Col Connor) it is expected will leave Benicia on or about the 10th of May for the Central Overland route. The barracks at Benicia will then be garrisoned by the Fourth Regiment, Col Forman. Five companies of this regiment are now at Camp Union in charge of the Colonel and five companies are in Oregon and Washington Territory under Lieut Col Lee. The entire regiment is, we understand, to be concentrated at Benicia. Camp Union will probably be abandoned.—Sac Union.

Coughs.—The sudden changes of our climate are sources of PULMONARY, BRONCHIAL and ASTHMATIC AFFECTIONS. Experience having proved that simple remedies often act speedily and certainly when taken in the early stages of the disease, recourse should at once be had to "Brown's Bronchial Troches," or Lozenges, let the Cold, Cough, or Irritation of the Throat be ever so slight, as by this precaution a more serious attack may be effectually warded off. PUBLIC SPEAKERS and SINGERS will find them effectual for clearing and strengthening the voice. See advertisement.

The Two Sisters.

BY NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE.

The following story, the simple and domestic incidents of which may be deemed hardly worth relating after such a lapse of time, awakened some degree of interest a hundred years ago, in a principal seaport in the Bay of Massachusetts. The rainy twilight of an autumn day, a parlor on the second floor of a house plainly furnished, as beseemed the circumstances of its inhabitants, yet decorated with curiosities from beyond the sea, and a few specimens of Indian manufacture—these are the only particulars to be presented in regard to the scenes and seasons. Two young and comely women sat together by the fireside, nursing their mutual and peculiar sorrows. They were the recent brides of two brothers, a sailor and a landsman, and two successive days had brought tidings of the death of each by the chances of Canadian warfare and the tempestuous Atlantic. The universal sympathies excited by this bereavement drew numerous condoling guests to the habitation of the widowed sisters. Several, among whom was the minister, had remained until the verge of the evening, when, one by one, whispering many comfortable passages of Scripture, that were answered by more abundant tears, they took their leave and departed to their own happier home. The mourners, though not insensible to kindness of their friends, had yearned to be left alone. United as they had been by relationship of the living, and now more closely so by that of the dead, each felt as if whatever consolation her grief admitted was to be found in the bosom of the other. They joined their hearts, and wept together silently. But after an hour of such indulgence one of the sisters, all of whose emotions were influenced by her mild, quiet, yet not feeble character, began to recollect the precepts of resignation and endurance which piety had taught her, when she did not think to heed them. Her misfortune besides, as earliest known, should earliest cease to interfere with her regular course of duties; accordingly, having placed the table before the fire, and arranging a frugal meal, she took the hand of her companion.

"Come, dearest sister, you have not eaten a morsel to day," she said. "Arise, I pray you, and let us ask a blessing on that which is provided for us."

Her sister was of a lively and irritable temperament, and the first pangs of her sorrow had been expressed by shrieks and passionate lamentations. She now shrunk from Mary's words like a wounded sufferer from the hand that revives the throb.

"There is no blessing for me, neither will I ask it. Would that it were His will that I might never taste food more," cried Margaret with a fresh burst of tears.

Yet she trembled at these rebellious expressions, almost as soon as they were uttered, and by degrees, Mary succeeded in bringing her sister's mind nearer to the situation of her own. Time rolled on, and the usual hour of repose arrived. The brothers and their brides had entered the married state with no more than the slender means which then sanctioned such a step and confederated themselves into one household with equal rights to the parlor, and claiming exclusive privileges to the sleeping rooms contiguous to it. Thither the widowed ones retired, after heaping ashes upon the dying embers of the fire, and placing a lighted lamp on the hearth. The doors of both chambers were left open, so that part of the interior of each, and the beds with their unclosed curtains, were reciprocally visible. Sleep did not steal upon the sisters at one and the same time. Mary experienced the effect often consequent upon grief quietly born, and soon sunk into temporary forgetfulness, while Margaret become more disturbed and feverish in proportion as the night advanced with its deepest and stillest hours. She lay listening to the drops of rain that came down in monotonous succession, unswayed by the breath of wind, and nervous impulse continually causing her to lift her head from the pillow, and gazing into Mary's chamber and the intermediate apartment. The cold light of the lamp threw the shadows of the furniture against the wall, stamping them immovably there, except when they were shaken by the sudden flicker of the flame. Two vacant arm chairs were in their old position on the opposite sides of the hearth, where the brothers had been wont to sit in laughing dignity, as heads of the families, two humbler seats were near them, the thrones of that little empire, where Mary and herself had exercised in love a power that love had won. The cheerful radiance of the fire had shone upon the happy circle, and the dead glimmer of the lamp might have benefited their reunion now. While Margaret groaned in bitterness she heard a knock at the street door.

"How would my heart leap at that sound but yesterday," thought she, remembering the anxiety with which she had so long awaited tidings from her husband. "I care not for it now; let them be gone, for I will not arise."

But even while a sort of childish fretfulness made her thus resolve, she was breathing hurriedly and straining her eyes to catch a repetition of the summons. It is difficult to be convinced of the death of one whom we have deemed another self. The knocking was now renewed in slow and regular strokes apparently given with the soft end of a doubled fist, and was heard through several thicknesses of the wall. Margaret looked to her sister's chamber, and beheld her still lying in the depths of sleep. She slightly arrayed herself, trembling between fear and eagerness as she did so.

"Heaven help me," sighed she, "I have nothing to fear, and methinks I am ten times more a coward than ever."

Seizing a lamp from the hearth, she hastened to the window that overlooked the street door. It was a lattice turning upon hinges, and having it thrown back, she stretched her head a little way into the moist atmosphere. A lantern was reddening the front of the house, and melting its light in the neighboring puddles, while a deluge of darkness overwhelmed every other object. As the window grated on its hinges, a man in a broad brimmed hat and blanket coat stepped from under the projecting story, and looked upward to discover whom his application had aroused. Margaret knew him as a friendly innkeeper of the town.

"What would you have, goodman Parker?" cried the widow.

"Lack a day, is it you, Mistress Margaret?" cried the innkeeper. "I was afraid it might be your sister Mary, for I hate to see a young woman in trouble, when I have no word of comfort to whisper to her."
